

New Orleans, LA

IV-V

Jan. 23, 1812

The Louisiana Gazette and Daily Advertiser
Jan. 24, 1812

A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city yesterday morning, about nine o'clock. The wind was from the southward, light and gentle, and the morning fine -- it lasted but a few seconds & but few felt it. At that time all is hustle in the city - but many proofs, such as clocks stopping, glass shades, and different kinds of glass ware and crockery shaking, the feelings of many who were either writing or reading, prove the fact. We may expect to hear more on the subject from the northward & eastward.